

Published based on Is leaving a cat in a cat-only kennel for 2 months too long?

Is leaving a cat in a cat-only kennel for 2 months too long?

I have to travel for 2 months straight and can not take the cat. I have had him for 14 years and the job is asking me to perform on this project. He had never had to go to a Kennel before. The kennel keeps the cats in very large 3 level cat condos. i just wonder if 2 months is too long. (closest person that could take him is 6hours away)

Much too long for any cat but at 14 it would be extra stress-full,and you need to be care-full as stress in an older cat can cause kidney problems,so don't risk his health get a someone to house sit him he would be much happier and so would you knowing he is safe at home,and give a piece of your clothing for him to sleep on for extra comfort, try to ask the person 6 hours away to come to him,this would be easier for him save all that travelling,at 14 any stress is best avoided he needs calm and tranquillity,avoid the kennel its not a good idea he would feel he was abandoned,and being amongst strangers with all those strange smells and sounds, and never being in a kennel before makes it worse he wouldn't cope,so get a house sitter after all you want the best for your boy.

You can also find this article published on Is leaving a cat in a cat-only kennel for 2 months too long?, and on the tag pages cat, cat condos, house sitter, is leaving a cat in a catonly kennel for 2 months too long, kennel, kidney problems, person, person 6, safe at home, stress.